Why Connect Generations?

Getting Started

- ▶ Organizational Assessment
- ▶ Readiness survey

Organizational Assessment

_____ We have at least one ongoing partnership with an educational institution or organization serving youth.

_____ Top administrators at our partner agencies are supportive of intergenerational programming and understand their roles and responsibilities.

_____ We meet regularly with a designated staff person at our partner agencies to plan meaningful short- and long-term activities and programs.

_____ We engage our partner organizations in training activities that raise awareness about the needs of youth and older adults and share effective strategies for fostering cross-age interaction.

_____ We developed materials to help us market our programs to potential partners.

Potential partners

- ▶ Elementary and secondary schools
- ▶ Colleges and universities
- ▶ Recreation Centers/Y's
- ▶ Youth organizations
- ▶ Teen parenting programs
- ▶ Programs for "out of school" youth
- ▶ Job training programs
- ▶ Art and music schools
- ▶ Residential homes for children
- ▶ 4-H
- ▶ Faith-based youth groups
- ▶ Home schooling associations
- ▶ Libraries
- ▶ Special education

Building Partnerships

How do you select a partner?

- ▶ Interest and commitment
- ▶ Organizational capacity
- ▶ Staff flexibility
- ▶ Common vision
- ▶ Potential areas of conflict

Strategies for Building Effective Partnerships

- ▶ Garner support from top administrators.
- ▶ Designate a person who can initiate and maintain partnerships.
- ▶ Identify how partner organizations can benefit from collaborating with you.
- ▶ Engage partners in short and long-term planning.
- ▶ Plan meaningful programs and activities.

Depth of Engagement

Planning a Program

Selecting a Program or Activity

When determining a focus for your programming, consider the following:

- ▶ Age/ability/culturally appropriate
- ▶ Related to the mission of partners
- ▶ Sufficient staff and financial resources
- ▶ When to offer the activity
- ▶ Space
- ▶ Transportation

Cultural Sensitivity

Cultural sensitivity considerations, regardless of program focus

- ▶ Ways older adults and youth in certain cultures are expected to interact
- ▶ How verbal and non-verbal communication patterns differ across cultures

Promising practices

- Build upon the interests and strengths of participants
- Co-plan programs with staff from partner agencies
- Clarify objectives of each activity
- Engage participants in planning and coordinating activities
- Focus on fostering intergenerational relationships and building empathy
- Build in time for reflection

Engaging older adults

Promising practices:

- Assess the skills, experiences, and interests of older adults to help guide your programming.
- Use older adults as intergenerational ambassadors and leaders.
- Develop a continuum of “intergenerational opportunities” that allows older adults to engage with different age groups, in different ways, and for varying lengths of time.
- Focus on how older people can benefit from and contribute to intergenerational activities, rather than just the activity itself.
- Provide orientation, training, and ongoing support to all participants.

Preparing older adults

- ▶ Draw on the experiences of older adults.
- ▶ Be sensitive to the literacy levels and cultural differences of participants.
- ▶ Stress the importance of confidentiality.
- ▶ Encourage tolerance and respect regarding difference in values.
- ▶ Highlight the strengths of young people and what they can offer residents.
- ▶ Model good listening skills.
- ▶ Provide opportunities for feedback.
- ▶ HAVE FUN!

Preparing youth

- ▶ Emphasize the diversity of the older adult population and explore age-related stereotypes..
- ▶ Help youth appreciate both the positive and negative aspects of aging.
- ▶ Tell students about the backgrounds of the older adults in the program.
- ▶ Review effective techniques for communicating with older adults.
- ▶ Provide time for youth to express concerns about interacting with older people and be prepared to address issues of loss and grief.

Measuring Your Impact

Process evaluation:

What happens during the development and implementation of a program?

Outcome evaluation:

What impact did the program have on participants?
